Petitioner-Appellant,

v.

MARK S. INCH,
Respondent-Appellee.

No. 07-3302
(Case No. 5:06-CV-3306-RDR)
(D. Kan.)

ORDER AND JUDGMENT*

Before O'BRIEN, McKAY, and GORSUCH, Circuit Judges.

Petitioner, a federal military prisoner proceeding pro se, appeals the district court's dismissal of his 28 U.S.C. § 2241 habeas petition. A general court-martial found Petitioner guilty of multiple charges of rape and indecent acts with his twelve-year old daughter. He was sentenced to confinement for nine years, reduction in paygrade, forfeiture of all pay and allowances, and a dishonorable discharge from the United States Navy. As more thoroughly described in the district court's order, his attempts to obtain relief in the Navy-Marine Court of

* This order and judgment is not binding precedent, except under the doctrines of law of the case, res judicata, and collateral estoppel. It may be cited, however, for its persuasive value consistent with Fed. R. App. P. 32.1 and 10th Cir. R. 32.1.

Criminal Appeals and the Court of Appeals for the Armed Forces were ultimately unsuccessful.

In his habeas petition, Petitioner raised ten grounds for relief. Two grounds alleged that the military appellate courts used the wrong standard of review or erred in applying the standard of review when considering his claims. The district court concluded that these grounds did not raise separate claims for relief. The court also concluded that Petitioner had waived a third ground for relief by failing to present it to the military courts. See Watson v. McCotter, 782 F.2d 143, 145 (10th Cir. 1986). As for the remaining seven grounds, the court found that “the military courts considered these claims and applied appropriate legal standards to issues involving mixed questions of fact and law, and [P]etitioner makes no convincing argument to the contrary.” (R. Doc. 19 at 6.) The court therefore concluded that these claims had been fully and fairly reviewed by the military courts and that any further review by the district court would be inappropriate. See Lips v. Commandant, U.S. Disciplinary Barracks, 997 F.2d 808, 811 (10th Cir. 1993). The district court accordingly dismissed the action and denied Petitioner’s motion for summary judgment as moot.

We review de novo a district court’s denial of habeas relief. Fricke v. Sec’y of Navy, 509 F.3d 1287, 1289 (10th Cir. 2007). Like the district court, “our review of military convictions is limited generally to jurisdictional issues and to determination of whether the military gave fair consideration to each of the petitioner's constitutional claims." Id. at 1290 (internal quotation marks omitted).

After reviewing Petitioner's brief and conducting a de novo review of the record, we agree with the district court's determination that two of Petitioner's stated grounds for relief did not raise separate claims for relief, a third ground was waived, and the remaining seven grounds were given full and fair consideration by the military courts.¹ Therefore, for substantially the same reasons set forth in the district court's order, we AFFIRM the dismissal of this action and denial of Petitioner's motion for summary judgment.²

² Under the circumstances of this case, we see no error in the district court's decision to dispose of Petitioner's motion for summary judgment in its order dismissing the case.
